Sea fishing rigs pdf

You'd be amazed at the number of amazing species of fish that regularly patrol ocean shores in search of food.Recommended Pre-Made Surf Fishing Rigs: Surf fishing can often be just as productive as deep-sea fishing if you take a few things into consideration.In many cases, it can be more productive just working some shallow water near shore, especially if all you need are a few fish for the pan.Some of the same species of fish that are caught offshore can be caught surf fishing. This is usually due to fish following schools of smaller prey fish near the shore, though sometimes, it can have much to do with water temperature.Depending on the tide and a few other elements, the shore can be a prime fishing location, typically in areas completely inaccessible to boats of any kind.Listen to more surf fishing tips on the Cast & Spear Podcast Surf fishing differs from pier fishing in that there are more factors you have to consider, like wave height, direction and tide, these may not be as important on the piers you fish, depending.In this article, we will cover some of the best surf fishing rigs, equipment needed for surf fishing, surf fishing tips, and more. Starting with these four surf rigs, you'll be well on your way to catch fish!Let's get into it!5 Best Surf Fishing RigsFish Finder RigHow to Tie a Fish Finder Rig + When NOT to Use It The Fish Finder Rig is great for naturally-presenting a piece of bait across sandy bottoms. If you look closely, the fish finder rig is similar to a Carolina Rig but uses a pyramid sinker instead of an egg sinker.Instead of a pyramid sinker, you can use a special clip and fasten a steel weight such as a bolt or spark plug.The fish finder rig does have some drawbacks since you have three knots between you and the fish and a sliding sinker that can damage your line if you're not careful.For a step-by-step build, check out our How to Tie a Fish Finder Rig Guide.Carolina RigHow to Tie a Carolina Rig for Surf FishingThe Carolina Rig is a popular choice in Southern California along beaches with little hard structure or kelp. Many fishermen use it for surf fishing using light line going for corbina, surfperch, and halibut.This rig is easy to tie, but it does help to have a few pre-made Carolina rigs in your saltwater tackle bag.Flapper RigFlappers are great to have in your surf fishing arsenal! SourceFor most of your surf fishing, you will find that a simple flapper rig, either a one, two or three hook version, can best fit your needs.These are the simplest and often most effective of all surf fishing rigs. They produce excellent results.The best approach is to tie the hook trace, also called a snood, onto a swivel, and locate the swivel on the body line between a couple of beads and locking crimps.This gives the snoods a much better chance of dealing with any line twists caused by the bait flapping around as it flies through the air on the cast. Or while sinking to the seabed.On a two or three hook flapper rig, the lower snood can be longer to give better bait separation on the seabed.Tied in this way, they are known as '1-up-1-down' or '2up-1down' flapper rigs.Clipped Rigs for Longer Range Surf CastingPre-made clip down rigClip down surf fishing rigs are more complex than flapper rigs, involving two more components, a bait clip for each snood, and a bait stop for each snood.These 1, 2, and 3-hook clipped rigs end in a link clip rather than a bait clip. This means that an impact lead must be used to provide a clip for the lower hook to be clipped to.In the 2 and 3-hooked rigs, the rolling swivel at the inner end of the dropper has been replaced by a cascade swivel. This incorporates a clip for the hook above it.Impact LeadsPulley rigs use the swivel to act as a pulley between the weight and the biting fish.Impact leads have the bait clip built-in alongside the attachment eye. In strong tides, you may have to go for the spiked version (often nicknamed "spunk" weights) to keep the rig anchored where you want it.You can instead use a standard link clip together with an impact shield. These are threaded on the rig main body line just above a standard link clip.They serve two purposes; first to provide a clip for the lower hook, and also to provide some protection for the bait as it lands at the end of the cast.The top hook is clipped to the cascade swivel of the second hook snood, and so on.Bait StopsThe reason for using bait stops is, during casting, the clipped-down hooks fly 'bend first' through the air which forces the bait over the eye and up the snood. Or it would, if it was not for the bait stop to prevent this from happening.An un-clipped flapper surf fishing rig will allow the hook to fly 'eye first' which keeps the bait located firmly in the bend of the hook. In this case, bait stops are not needed.Dropper Loop RigGive this one a shot! SourceIn the loop rig, the cascade swivel is tied in the snood close to the hook. This clips the lower bait in tight and forms a loop in the line between the rolling swivel and the cascade swivel.The three hook loop rig was developed for casting long-snooded clipped rigs at incredible distances.This is a variation of the lower dropper in a '1-up, 1-down' or '2-up, 1-down' version of the clipped-down surf fishing rig. It would be too long overall for all practical purposes.Pulley RigA great pre-made pulley rigThis is a surf fishing rig designed for fishing over rough ground. More often than not the lead weight is what gets caught.The Pulley Rig has been designed to eliminate this risk by allowing the weight of hooked fish to pull the lead weight into a position ahead of the fish. It is much less likely to get hung up.Used with an impact lead or an impact shield, the simple pulley rig is capable of being cast very long distances indeed.As a long-range surf fishing rig, it is often used with a tandem hook Pennel rig for large baits. This also helps the rig hold larger fish.What Is Surf Fishing?Surf fishing is fishing from the shoreline in areas exposed to waves.Sometimes, casting as far out as you can to reach is beneficial, while sometimes, fishing a few feet off your rod tip can be amazingly productive, typically in heavy structure areas on an incoming tide for panfish type species.Depending on the location, anglers may wade as far out as they can to get a farther cast or get a better casting angle on a type of structure. Extreme care must always be taken when doing this.Surf Fishing SafetyThere are some strong currents and undertows that can sweep you farther out into the water, some may drown an angler outright before you have the ability to respond.If you fish in areas with truly life-threatening rip currents, rogue waves or strong coastal currents, wearing a life vest when wading can save your life. we all only get one life, make it count!Other things to watch for when surf fishing are sharp bottom objects, aggressive sharks, trash/entangling hazards, stinging/biting fish, potentially lethal/painful jellyfish, and crustaceans.Chest high or at least hip-high waders are recommended to prevent some of these issues. Shuffling your feet when you walk in stingray infested water is always a great idea, as you will usually kick these fish away from you when wading.They will also keep you dry which allows you to be in the cold water for a longer duration. If you are chumming from the beach, reduce the risk of shark and ray incidents by chumming after you have cast and return to shore as much as possible, and after people have left the water.Surf Fishing GearExtremely long rods, from 7 to 16 feet with the best surf fishing reel make for a fantastic saltwater rod and reel combo that are frequently used to extend the length of the cast. Specialized, two-handed casting techniques are typically used to cast the lure or bait.Shorter rods are more easily used when chum is utilized to draw more fish close to shore or into an open area where they can be more easily targeted. Poke and cane poles can be used for lowering the bait into rocky pools where certain fish can lurk.The added distances required in many cases to reach feeding inshore fish can be daunting to beginners, so utilizing some free feed can be effective along with whatever structure or current break you are working if it is legal to do so.In addition to standard two-handed casts, many surf casters also resort to the pendulum cast (derived from tournament casting contests). This is to achieve added distance. In some cases exceeding 700 feet.Tournament casting is a sport in its own right, with the world record held by Danny Moeskops casting a distance of 266.63 meters (313.46 yards).Best Time to Surf FishThere are certain zones to cast baits that are more profitable than others. It depends greatly on the contour of the seabed as well as conditions, swell direction, rip currents, flat spots in the waves, or flat current areas behind rocks for example.By observing wave motion, in particular where they break, is important. Churning by the waves stirs the bottom and brings organisms down current for the fish to eat, likesand crabs/leashshrimplamscrabsands eels and more.This constant motion funnels them away across channels to deeper points and along the edges of hard structure, where currents along the shore deposit them into water that is less confused. This is where they may become the prey of fish, opportunistically awaiting this advantage.Tides Matter When Surf FishingTides determine the greatest movement of water, thus, what may be biting (or even present) at a given time of day. The feeding cycle of many fish is directly affected by the movements of tidal water.For example, at the peak of the low or high tide when the water is "slack ", snappers, calico bass, redfish, bluefish, and many other fish species tend to feel more able to feed when the water is flowing, as more food is being pushed into areas they have access.The predatory fish bite regularly slows or stops altogether dependent on high water flow in the surf.Flood and Ebb TidesThere are often times when the fish feed at the start of the flood tide and the tail end of the ebb tide.For the fish we fish here in Southern California, a low incoming tide at sundown is a great time to fish, if safe to do so.There's variation in the diet of fish species from one region to another and at different times.What seems common to certain fish species eating habits in one place may not be the same anywhere else, even at a short distance away, knowledge of your local water conditions can be key.Types of Fish to Target Surf FishingThese are a few of the many species of fish that can be found along the shores of coastal waters from east to west.Surf Fishing BaitsThe type of bait used for surf fishing largely depends on the species of fish you are fishing for. If you want the easiest saltwater fish to catch, you should use the appropriate bait.There are some baits that are pretty common across the board. These baits include:ShrimpMost saltwater fish eat shrimp, live or dead. Usually, shrimp attract bluefish, redfish, and other sportfish like calico bass, rockfish and surf perch. If you are going to use dead shrimp, it is recommended to remove the head and tail before baiting on your hook and using just enough to cover the bend of the hook leaving the point exposed.MulletMullet are fish that many sportfish eat naturally in the wild. It is best to cut it into chunks before baiting to your hook unless using them alive for large fish or sharks.CrabsSmaller crabs almost always work well for sportfish. When using small crabs, use the whole crab.Sand FleasAlso known as mole crabs or sand crabs, wash onshore in large groups. They dig themselves down into the sand. You can use a small rake to uncover them. Store them in a bucket with wet sand in the bottom.SquidSquid makes an almost irresistible bait for many sportfish. It can be purchased fresh or frozen at many bait shops and local markets as human food. You can use squid whole or cut into pieces.Frequently Asked QuestionsBest bait for redfish?A: Crabs and shrimp are the primary bait of choice for redfish.How to catch bluefish?A: Trolling, or casting artificial lures is the best way to catch bluefish. Cut baits are also a good choice for catching bluefish.How to fish from the beach?A: This is known as surf fishing. It is important to fish according to the tides for optimal results. Surf fishing takes a good amount of upper body strength.Once you have your surf fishing rig, you will want to cast your line as far out as you can. This is while standing as close to the surf as you feel comfortable.Remember, the farther you can cast the better your results will probably be.Best bait for surf fishing?A: This will depend on the species of fish you are fishing for. As a good rule, live baits such as crabs and shrimp generally work well for many species that can be caught surf fishing.How to catch flounder from shore?A: Galveston surf fishing offers some great flounder fishing. Flounder being an ambush predator, will usually respond to jigs and live bait.How to tie a high low rig?A: Using 50 lb test leader material, cut off a 3-foot length. Leader material is sold in loops and is stiffer than spooled mono.On each end of the mono length, tie a double surgeon loop knot. One foot from each end of this knot, tie a dropper loop knot. This will give you two dropper loops for your hooks.Run the loop through your hooks, hook your sinker on the bottom.How to make a pompano rig?A: There are several opinions on how to tie a pompano rig. Here's a pre-made one worth checking out.Tie the Palomar Knot to the swivel 10" or so from the first drop.Two or three dropper loops 10" or so apart with the top loop trace cut 1/4" from the knot. Standard 3mm red bead, #2 or #1 Mustad Ultra Point Demon Circle (upturned eye) snelled 6" or so from the dropper knot.Double surgeon's loop 12+" below the last trace for the weight.Bait with salted peeled shrimp bits, tiny pieces of cut bait, or fish bites.Insider AdviceSurf fishing is a great way to fish. It allows you to get at some nice sportfish without involving a lot of expense or having to use a boat.Once you get the hang of surf fishing, it can be a lot of fun, and an all-around great experience.Surf fishing rigs come in many different styles. We have named a few of the more common ones in this article.The fish finder rig, redfish rig, striped rig, and high low rig are a few other notable mentions that work very well.These rigs are also some of the easier ones to fish with. This is especially good for a beginner that is just learning to surf fish. The Anglers Behind This Article:
